Learning from the legacies of people who made extraordinary sacrifices

The history of Jewish rescue activists are filled with altruistic efforts to save lives.

In Parshas Devarim (1:14), Moshe Rabbeinu chastises Klal Yisroel, "ממי נאה ללמוד ממך או מתלמידך" - From whom is it preferable to learn, from the teacher or from his disciple? Rashi explains that Moshe's rebuke was that Klal Yisroel had the opportunity to learn Torah from one who had personally sacrificed for it, and yet they chose his disciples who hadn't made that same sacrifice. When learning from one who made sacrifices for a specific cause, we not only gain knowledge but they also inspire us by their passion and devotion.

The contest

This contest portrays the lives and challenges of eight Jewish activists during the Holocaust. You have for your consideration, eight original artifacts and photos that describe their activities and lives. Their actions are not only representative of the heroic efforts of these Holocaust rescue activists but also convey the altruistic sacrifices that they made. As the Holocaust unfolded, committed individuals from Switzerland, Austria, Morocco, Slovakia, the United States, and the United Kingdom, pursued options that could only be understood as heroic. They devised ransom plans, secured forged and illegal exit visas and passports for trapped Jews and met with Nazi officials to facilitate Jewish rescue. Their unwavering commitment to never give up despite insurmountable challenges is nothing less than awe-inspiring.

These ordinary artifacts bear testimony to extraordinary deeds and provide us with a model when facing challenges in our own lives and circumstances.

Yechiel (Julius) Kuhl's swastika marked postcard

Dr. Julius Kuhl was involved in the clandestine production of false Latin American passports by the Polish Legation in Bern, Switzerland. Dr. Kuhl is credited with the survival of hundreds of Jews in German Occupied Poland and the Netherlands during the Holocaust. In 1941, he supervised the illegal production of Latin American passports for Jews in occupied Poland. With these falsified documents, Polish and Dutch Jews could claim they were citizens of non-European countries and escape death. The Polish Legation for which he worked produced 4000 passports during this difficult and tragic period.

The swastika stamped postcard is from the Warsaw Ghetto. This individual, who was writing to Dr. Kuhl and pleading for help, was indicative of Dr. Kuhl's everyday communications with Jews desperate for aid. Though Dr. Kuhl placed himself in great legal jeopardy, he would never turn down the plea of a person pleading for rescue.

Renee Reichmann's typewriter

Mrs. Renee Reichmann was the matriarch of a prominent religious family in Vienna. The Reichmann family escaped war torn Europe for the international city of Tangier in 1940. While residing in Spanish occupied Morocco, Mrs. Reichmann, with the help of her daughter Eva, pressured officials from the Franco regime of Spain to issue visas for Jews in Nazi controlled Hungary. This effort rescued several thousand lives. In addition, Renee and Eva Reichmann worked with the Spanish Red Cross to send thousands of food parcels to Auschwitz, and other concentration camps.

Mrs. Reichmann's typewriter, which she used for her activities, is a confirmation of her tireless work and devotion to help Europe's beleaguered Jews. Each key played a role in her efforts to save lives. One can only imagine the hope that accompanied the letters typed on Renee Reichmann's machine.

Elimelech (Mike) Tress' Briefcase

Mike Tress assumed the leadership of the Zeirei Agudath Israel in the United States in 1937. He was a master of the intricacies of American immigration policy and applied this critical knowledge for Jews fleeing Europe. His worn leather briefcase, overflowing with refugees affidavits and orphan files, is a testament of his many trips between New York and Washington DC throughout the war. When necessary, he even traveled on Shabbos, as pikuach nefesh (saving lives) overrides this prohibition.

The briefcase also followed him into the immediate post Holocaust era, containing files of rescued Jewish children from Christian homes and institutions in Belgium and Hungary. His never-ending commitment and sense of mission is what kept him going even when faced with a myriad of challenges. He knew that the files in his briefcase were not mere documents, but rather, human lives.

Recha Sternbuch's passport

Recha Sternbuch was a devoted rescue activist who, with her husband Yitzchak and brother in law Eli, worked tirelessly to assist Jewish refugees. Her vast activities covered not only the entire European continent, but also internationally. The Sternbuchs sent the famed cable to activists in the United States with information about the mass Jewish deportations from the Warsaw Ghetto. Recha and her husband, Yitzchak, negotiated with Nazi Reichsfuhrer Heinrich Himmler, through surrogates, which led to the transfer of 1,200 Jews from Theresienstadt to Switzerland in February 1945. Recha negotiated the release of thousands of women from the Ravensbruck concentration camp and 15,000 Jews held in Austria.

Due to her rescue activities, she missed her only son's bar mitzvah and was even arrested for helping Jews escape certain death. Her passport, overflowing with border stamps, documents her selfless efforts.

Rabbi Michoel Dov Ber Weissmandl's 1943 letter for help

Rabbi Michoel Ber Weissmandl's approach to Jewish rescue knew no bounds. He called for the bombing of Auschwitz and the railways and bridges leading to it. He offered ransom to Adolf Eichmann's envoy to Bratislava and Slovak officials in an effort to stop the deportation of Slovakian Jews. Rabbi Weissmandl's wife and five children were murdered in Auschwitz.

Regardless of the tragic personal loss of his family, he continued his holy work, placing his own life at risk at every moment. In this 1943 letter to fellow activist Chaim Eiss of Switzerland, Rabbi Weissmandl, a leading advocate for ransoming Jews for money, stated the following, "[...] If we had money in our hands, thousands and thousands could still be rescued from death." Each word of this letter was indicative of Rabbi Weissmandl's love for all of his fellow Jews.

Yaakov Shlomo (Julius) Steinfeld's train ticket to Liberia

After the 1938 Anschluss (the political union of Germany and Austria), all Jewish organizations were officially dismantled by the Nazis. In the midst of this crisis, Julius Steinfeld became the de facto organizer of the religious Viennese Jewish community. He procured visas and travel arrangements to nearly 30 countries, including Eretz Yisroel, the United States and England, in order to to aid the destitute Jews of Austria. He personally negotiated with Adolf Eichmann to facilitate Jewish emigration. Mr. Steinfeld did not hesitate even when Eichmann aimed his gun and threatened to shoot him in his office.

Julius Steinfeld managed to obtain 1,000 forged Liberian visas from his contacts at the Liberian consul. That accomplishment produced the single largest transport of Jewish refugees to Eretz Yisroel from Vienna, on November 4, 1938, one week before Kristallnacht. This travel document to Liberia is likely the only surviving train ticket from that voyage.

Yaakov Rosenheim's desk and ledger book

Moreinu Yaakov Rosenheim was one of Orthodox Jewry's most prominent lay figures. He was involved in a myriad of initiatives and projects that were responsible for rescuing thousands of Jews during the Holocaust. Moreinu Rosenheim helped found the Chief Rabbis Religious Emergency Council of England in 1938, as well as supported the Kindertransports through his work with Rabbi Dr. Solomon Schonfeld. With the establishment of the American War Refugee Board in January 1944, Rosenheim was successful in naming Yaakov Griffel as an official representative of the Board in Istanbul. This single act enabled the use of free US cables via Turkey for sending critical ransom funds to European religious activists.

Yaakov Rosenheim's organizational acumen and stature place him at the very center of rescue efforts to save European Jewry. His desk and daily ledger book bear testimony to his leadership and the crises he dealt with every single day.

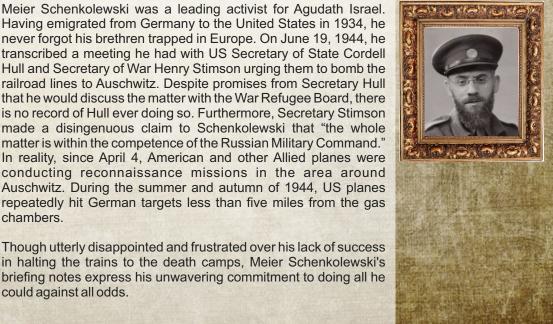

Meier Schenkolewski and the Auschwitz briefings

EMPORT MR. SCHEMKOLEMSKI CONCERNING TRIP TO WASHINGTON HE: A DOVE LETTER (June 19th)

ds the letter of Mr. Rosenheim and shows keen interest in the matter

Having emigrated from Germany to the United States in 1934, he never forgot his brethren trapped in Europe. On June 19, 1944, he transcribed a meeting he had with US Secretary of State Cordell Hull and Secretary of War Henry Stimson urging them to bomb the railroad lines to Auschwitz. Despite promises from Secretary Hull that he would discuss the matter with the War Refugee Board, there is no record of Hull ever doing so. Furthermore, Secretary Stimson made a disingenuous claim to Schenkolewski that "the whole matter is within the competence of the Russian Military Command." In reality, since April 4, American and other Allied planes were conducting reconnaissance missions in the area around Auschwitz. During the summer and autumn of 1944, US planes repeatedly hit German targets less than five miles from the gas chambers.

Though utterly disappointed and frustrated over his lack of success in halting the trains to the death camps, Meier Schenkolewski's briefing notes express his unwavering commitment to doing all he could against all odds.
